About the Job

The School of Dentistry seeks candidates for a full-time junior/entry-level position at 80% FTE to join the Division of TMD and Orofacial Pain with full benefits for the 80% position, as well as 20% time to engage in other activities (e.g., private practice, consulting, additional research). This position will primarily provide clinical supervision, didactic instruction for Orofacial Pain residents, providing patient care services (supervising and directly providing care are different activities), in addition to instruction of predoctoral students in the clinic as assigned by the Division Director. There is opportunity to engage in existing research. The breakdown of time allocation is 2 days a week providing Orofacial Pain patient care, 1 day a week teaching, and 1 day a week administration and research activities. The position is a 1-year term contract with an opportunity of extending another 1-2 year based on performance and availability of funds.

The preferred candidate will be an Orofacial Pain clinician with a strong desire to develop an academic career and conduct scholarly work. Candidates must be committed to teaching and developing our residents with dedication and commitment to providing full scope quality care and service to patients. Position will remain open until filled.
